

Crossing the Generational Divide in the Workplace?

Thursday, May 28 5:30 - 7:30 pm

Light Dinner - 5:00 - 5:30 pm

Cooperage 1030 Main Street Honesdale

Today's work environment includes multiple generations. Each defined generation can have different expectations, communication styles, and perspectives. Developing a strategy that addresses the distinctive characteristics of different generations in the workplace can allow employers to harness the respective strengths of their workforce and better compete in the marketplace.

Understanding the experiences that define and motivate different generations can improve your organization's effectiveness with board, staff, volunteers, and community members.

This workshop will assist organizations to be able to identify the four different generations that make up our work force today, to become more aware of how people of different generations tend to have different sets of experiences, perspectives, core values and expectations in the workplace and to gain insight into how to reduce the potential for intergenerational misunderstanding that might occur at the workplace
